Matheson's novel is set in Los Angeles, but the film takes place in New York City, which Lawrence thought of making a more surprisingly empty position. He estimates that there are about 830 shots of special effects in the film, but he did not want to rely entirely on the computer image to get the ghost-city effect. "I didn't want the city to look like a painting," he says. "When you shoot on the blue screen and on the green screen all the time and everything is generated, it starts to look a little bit of a shrink. "Thus, Lawrence was filming the streets of Manhattan. As you can imagine, this aroused the wrath -- and raised the middle fingers - of some inconvenience Manhattanites. But for Will Smith, it was a small price to pay. "You can't beat actually walking along the center of a New York street with an M-16," he says. "It really assists in the psychology of creating the character when you can actually be on site and not on the green screen or in Baltimore [stand in] for New York. "The team of effects had to do some post-production work to remove the signs of life from the landscape, but, Lawrence says, "the center has a real place with real light and particles in the air, and adds realism. "Lawrence released an area outside Grand Central Station, Fifth Avenue and Washington Square Park for a driving sequence. "The film could not be more fun or more headache at the same time," he says. "You have 200 production assistants hiding in the door and behind the corners, and traffic cops blocking the road and it's a zoo, just to get shot a guy walking down the street with his dog." The destruction of bridges and Times Square, of course, were generated by the computer, the only external hits that were not alive. In addition to the occasional non-cooperative individual, says Lawrence, people have hosted production -- and the elements obliged, too. "We were really lucky, in a climate sense," he continues. "We must shoot all the outside while there were leaves on the trees, and much of it we had to shoot weekend for traffic control. It was really planned. If we had rained, we would have been screwed. But it only rained twice when we were shooting out. " Lawrence says he couldn't have done the film without the collaboration of many city and government agencies, especially for a chaotic sequence of evacuation. He spent five days running Smith and 1,500 extras on a pier built on a kiosk under the Brooklyn Bridge. "It was a daunting idea," Lawrence admits. "It was a great collaboration from many people - the Coast Guard, the National Guard, the city, the police, the fire department. But the evacuation went pretty smooth," he says. The police eventually released a couple of days after January 20th. Monster Legends is a multiplayer role-playing game playing an army of monsters from eggs scattered into formidable fighters, preparing your beasts for the battlefield from the beginning. With hundreds of monsters available (each with a unique skill set) and the ability to reproduce and create new hybrid species, practically every player in this robust RPG commands their strength of â € œ Lite. Playable in a web browser through Facebook or in Android and iOS apps, Monster Legends allows you to put your army of beasts specially trained against computer-controlled enemies and millions of players around the world. While progressing in your role as Monster Master, you will improve a paradise of personalized monsters in which your creatures reside in specially realized habitats. â € ¸ about this island where you feed your monsters, they facilitate their formation and reproduces them between heading to the battle or missions and other mini-games to get experience and valuable loot. Available in different popular languages and free to play, Monster Legends turn-off fights are similar to traditional RPG battles and require a strategic mind and careful planning when reaching higher levels. As your team grows in strength, soThe ability to take part in a rewarding action against player. With new monsters, objects and progression paths added weekly and a reasonably in-depth game engine, Monster Legends offers long-term fun for anyone who chooses to engage. Monster legends can be played on facebook or via an app. No matter what method you use, the process is simple, and you will be running in a few minutes. When you open the game for the first time, Pandalf, the long monster master beard, greets you. You give you a step by step by step on how to develop your island. Step 1: Building a habitat: Pandalf takes you through the process of buying and creating a fire habitat on your island, the only type of habitat available for level players 1. Step 2: Creating a monster: after having a Habitat, create your first monster by buying a Firesaur egg and waiting to hook it. Once hit, place your new monster in the Fire Habitat. Step 3: Feed your monster: your focusauro can be cute at level 1, but it's not much use in a battle. Pandalf guides you through feeding so that you acquire experience points and become stronger. Step 4: Build a farm: the monster food is not free, so the construction of a farm on your island allows you to cultivate food. The first element we produce is the tail of Blue Lizard (Yum!). At this point where the introductory tutorial ends, and Pandalf allows you to play alone, instructing to expand your island with more monsters. It is never far away, as a click or tap on the Goals button guides you through the recommended steps, which include combining fire with nature on the mountain mountain to create a Greenasaur hybrid monster. While progressing, your island and your army develop where you are ready for your first battle, which is when excitement begins. Over time you will become more comfortable with battles, in the end you will work up to the PVP mode. In Pvp Mode, yes team with and fight against other players to climb the rankings. Those who thrive in this part of the game can participate in Legendary Leagues, where the yeurs and rewards are very ambien. You don't need to integrate Monster Legends with a Facebook account if you are playing the app. However, it helps along the way as the sharing of your state and other updates to certain joints throughout the game guarantees additional gold, treasure, experience points and new monsters. Monster Legends is evaluated 9+ due to occasional violence of cartoons, which means that children under the age of 9 should not play the game. Although it has a younger atmosphere in terms of animation style, some of the advanced gameplay combined with the vast compendium of creatures, objects, skills and statistics also attracts adults. There are global chat and in-game team formats, often needed for PVP, which exposes children at a level of communication and exposure that may not be convenient with as a parent. It is the case with practically all the multiplayer games, but this does not make it less than a potential threat. If your child has a Facebook profile, the direct integration of the game with the Social Media website could place some danger if they connect with the wrong people. However, this aspect is something that a parent can check through Facebook, so there is less risk there. Keep an eye on your child's online activity, even within Monster Legends. The goal is not to scare you to allow your children to play Monster Legends. It is a fun game that teaches mathematics, strategy, patience and teamwork. It costs nothing to play Monster Legends. However, there are in-game purchases available. Make sure you manage In-app so your children are not buying gems or other goodies without your permission (or otherwise you could be in an unpleasant surprise next time you look at your credit card declaration).
